Annual Report

on

Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs)

Executive Summary

The use of the right technology is the one that is adaptable, eco-friendly, efficient, culturally adoptable, and sustainable. It involves due consideration given to all stakeholders, particularly local resources and local staff. Nature is often taken as an example, using the natural conditions of the region as part of it. This concept may be termed as "sustainable design". Technology should use fewer resources and should produce less waste. In this regard, Khwaja Fareed University of Engineering and Information Technology (KFUEIT), Pakistan is applying all the resource-efficient technologies and practices available at its disposal. Efficient energy electric appliances are installed in the KFUEIT at all levels to ensure efficient utilization of electricity. In the efforts to achieve a higher sustainability level, the 3-R method is followed that promotes resource reduction and recycling instead of waste disposal. Recycling goes a long way in achieving the goals of sustainability. It reduces pressure on the resources, and reduces waste generation and pollution. In this regard, KFUEIT installed the solar-driven wastewater treatment plant for the recycling of the wastewater, and is effectively utilizing wastewater for irrigation to enhance the campus greenery through the modern practices of horticulture and landscaping techniques. KFUEIT also recycles organic and plastic waste for the efficient utilization of resources. Plastic waste is converted into useful parts for reuse in different applications. Organic waste is recycled for reuse in agriculture practices for the improvement of the soil health. Additionally, organic waste is used in the biogas plant and clean combustion of biomass. Environmental education is the basis of the whole learning process that will go a long way in changing people's thinking and attitudes about our planet and the environment. Therefore, KFUEIT always paves the road in this regard through a vast number of activities, including seminar series, webinars, awareness walks, use of electric vehicles, series of tree plantation drives throughout the planting seasons. KFUEIT has planted around 50000 trees on the campus in recent years. A number of activities including farmer's trainings for the effective utilization of the agriculture inputs, solar system operation at the farm system, and effective water management techniques are conducted. All the aforementioned activities are performed to attain the sustainability from the campus to the regional scale and eventually at the national scale that will contribute towards the sustainability achievements at the global scale. The system stability depends largely on the administrative capacity of the system. When the administrative capacity of the system exceeds (say, through excessive exploitation of a resource), the destruction of the environment begins and continues to the point of irreversibility. Sustainability is the key component for the achievement of the national development that is only possible through effective utilization, and KFUEIT is one of the leading institutes by implementing efficient methods of the resource utilization.
